

---

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by Zaphod Beeblebrox - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, nor is career placement going to go out on a limb to place her ahead of much better students. T Dood! I've been teaching cowlidge kids for about 25 years. I can't say I'm all THAT surprised...

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by xyzyy - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down unless you're applying to medical, pharmacy, law, or graduate school.....nobody really cares what her gpa is. She's not getting a job because she's a tool....and that would be the case whether she had a 4.0 or a 2.7. You couldn't be more wrong if'n you were more wrong. 3.0, 3.5, etc. cutoffs for employers are very common. A 2.7 will, at best, get her a temp job with a beltway defense contractor, or as a patent examiner.

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by Jon Enslin - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, Maybe this is really the problem? Colleges should do a better job of weeding people out and not inflating their grades. Not everybody is made to be a college graduate, and the sooner they find out, the better. Then, they can get on with their working life and not waste $18,000/year. So perhaps the college should be sued. So tell me...if a student is by and large eligible, what criteria should they use for denying them admission? just raise their admissions standards.....there are no reasons why colleges like the college I graduated from or the college you work at needs to have so many students seeking college degrees..... So what you are saying is that we should divert a bunch of $$$ from four year schools to tech schools. nah....tech schools already have enough money.....(hell it's free for anyone in many states who hasnt been to a tech school to go)..... do something else with the money. Maybe more grants for the actually decent students. Or just save it. I dunno..... So what you propose doing is telling a bunch of kids that they will not have access to an education beyond high school. Even though that there aren't that many successful career paths out there for students with only HS diplomas. Not very cool. Jon

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by Mrs Mookie - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, Maybe this is really the problem? Colleges should do a better job of weeding people out and not inflating their grades. Not everybody is made to be a college graduate, and the sooner they find out, the better. Then, they can get on with their working life and not waste $18,000/year. So perhaps the college should be sued. So tell me...if a student is by and large eligible, what criteria should they use for denying them admission? I mean, there are kids that are booksmart enough to get by in college...even with a 2.7...but you just know are going to struggle after they leave. But that's not the college's fault. Jon That decision should be made by the student BEFORE college; that's when you need a good-to-great guidance counselor in high/prep school. Hell, TFGC and I have already decided that he's not cut out for college. Conversely, like I mentioned before, there's no way I'd spend 4 yrs and $70k for a BA in IT...that's a 2 yrs program at best and spend the rest of the money on certs... the problem is that there are still a lot of decent entry level jobs (moreso in govt sector) that still require or give strong preference to those with a bs/ba.....even in IT fields. Im not saying it makes sense, but it still is sometimes the case. ...why am I going here... Anywhoo, from being in the IT field (corporate and education) for the past 17 yrs, the answer is no. If there's anything that's going to set you ahead in this field its' gonna be certifications. 9 out of 10 employers will take a certification over a BA any day of the week. Mookie

---

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by The BorgMan - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, Maybe this is really the problem? Colleges should do a better job of weeding people out and not inflating their grades. Not everybody is made to be a college graduate, and the sooner they find out, the better. Then, they can get on with their working life and not waste $18,000/year. So perhaps the college should be sued. So tell me...if a student is by and large eligible, what criteria should they use for denying them admission? just raise their admissions standards.....there are no reasons why colleges like the college I graduated from or the college you work at needs to have so many students seeking college degrees..... So what you are saying is that we should divert a bunch of $$$ from four year schools to tech schools. Actually, I don't know about divert - but we should massively increase funding for vocational/technical programs.

---

---

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by The BorgMan - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down unless you're applying to medical, pharmacy, law, or graduate school.....nobody really cares what her gpa is. She's not getting a job because she's a tool....and that would be the case whether she had a 4.0 or a 2.7. You couldn't be more wrong if'n you were more wrong. 3.0, 3.5, etc. cutoffs for employers are very common. Yep. Intel will not hire someone who has below a 3.0 GPA. I know someone who had a job offer rescinded based on their last semesters grades pushing their GPA barely below 3.0.

---

---

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by Mrs Mookie - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, Maybe this is really the problem? Colleges should do a better job of weeding people out and not inflating their grades. Not everybody is made to be a college graduate, and the sooner they find out, the better. Then, they can get on with their working life and not waste $18,000/year. So perhaps the college should be sued. So tell me...if a student is by and large eligible, what criteria should they use for denying them admission? just raise their admissions standards.....there are no reasons why colleges like the college I graduated from or the college you work at needs to have so many students seeking college degrees..... So what you are saying is that we should divert a bunch of $$$ from four year schools to tech schools. Actually, I don't know about divert - but we should massively increase funding for vocational/technical programs.

---

---

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by James Gibson - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, Maybe this is really the problem? Colleges should do a better job of weeding people out and not inflating their grades. Not everybody is made to be a college graduate, and the sooner they find out, the better. Then, they can get on with their working life and not waste $18,000/year. So perhaps the college should be sued. So tell me...if a student is by and large eligible, what criteria should they use for denying them admission? just raise their admissions standards.....there are no reasons why colleges like the college I graduated from or the college you work at needs to have so many students seeking college degrees..... So what you are saying is that we should divert a bunch of $$$ from four year schools to tech schools. nah....tech schools already have enough money.....(hell it's free for anyone in many states who hasn't been to a tech school to go)..... do something else with the money. Maybe more grants for the actually decent students. Or just save it. I dunno..... So what you propose doing is telling a bunch of kids that they will not have access to an education beyond high school. Even though that there aren't that many successful career paths out there for students with only HS diplomas. Not very cool. I don't think it's very cool to herd kids into college and have them find out after 4 years of education they won't have a successful career path, either.

---

---

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by Anthony Summers - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

So what you propose doing is telling a bunch of kids that they will not have access to an education beyond high school. Even though that there aren't that many successful career paths out there for students with only HS diplomas. Not very cool. I don't think it's very cool to herd kids into college and have them find out after 4 years of education they won't have a successful career path, either. When did college stop being about education and start being about vocational training? It's what you DO with that education that matters... which is why the sheepskin itself is pretty much irrelevant for many, many careers.

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by Jon Enslin - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF.
In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, Maybe this is really the problem? Colleges should do a better job of weeding people out and not inflating their grades. Not everybody is made to be a college graduate, and the sooner they find out, the better. Then, they can get on with their working life and not waste $18,000/year. So perhaps the college should be sued. So tell me...if a student is by and large eligible, what criteria should they use for denying them admission? just raise their admissions standards.....there are no reasons why colleges like the college I graduated from or the college you work at needs to have so many students seeking college degrees.....
So what you are saying is that we should divert a bunch of $$$ from four year schools to tech schools. nah....tech schools already have enough money.....(hell it's free for anyone in many states who hasn't been to a tech school to go)..... do something else with the money. Maybe more grants for the actually decent students. Or just save it. I dunno..... So what you propose doing is telling a bunch of kids that they will not have access to an education beyond high school. Even though that there aren't that many successful career paths out there for students with only HS diplomas. Not very cool. I don't think it's very cool to herd kids into college and have them find out after 4 years of education they won't have a successful career path, either. My guess is that it is the fault of the kids more than the college though. College's can't just guaranty that someone will be employable. Jon

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by mianderson - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

best, get her a temp job with a beltway defense contractor, or as a patent examiner.

=====

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by mianderson - 2009/09/08 16:12

---

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview> IWFTF.
In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, Maybe this is really the problem? Colleges should do a better job of weeding people out and not inflating their grades. Not everybody is made to be a college graduate, and the sooner they find out, the better. Then, they can get on with their working life and not waste $18,000/year. So perhaps the college should be sued. So tell me...if a student is by and large eligible, what criteria should they use for denying them admission? just raise their admissions standards.....there are no reasons why colleges like the college I graduated from or the college you work at needs to have so many students seeking college degrees..... So what you are saying is that we should divert a bunch of $$$ from four year schools to tech schools. nah....tech schools already have enough money.....(hell it's free for anyone in many states who hasnt been to a tech school to go)..... do something else with the money. Maybe more grants for the actually decent students. Or just save it. I dunno..... So what you propose doing is telling a bunch of kids that they will not have access to an education beyond high school. Even though that there aren't that many successful career paths out there for students with only HS diplomas. but thats part of the problem.....if there werent 5000 two bit colleges admitting everyone who can read(a little bit btw) into college, there wouldn't be entry level qualification standards for jobs that dont need it. I mean hell, one of the local geicos, based on an ad I saw in the paper, is now requiring those people who answer the phones to take claims(not even the claims adjuster), whatever they are called, to have a bachelors degree....I mean jesus christ, it doesnt take a bachelors degree to answer the damn phone and process an initial claim.....but since now anyone who can sorta read is made to go to a 4 year college, thats the new standard I guess.....t doesnt apply to me so I dont really give a damn, but it's a horrendous use of resources and time....

---

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by mianderson - 2009/09/08 16:12

- Show quoted text -

---

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by mianderson - 2009/09/08 16:12

<http://www.cnn.com/2009/US/08/03/new.york.jobless.graduate/index.html?iref=mpstoryview>
IWFTF. In the era of rampant grade inflation, she needs to realize that her 2.7 GPA really isn't going to have potential employers jumping up and down, Maybe this is really the problem? Colleges should do a better job of weeding people out and not inflating their grades. Not everybody is made to be a college graduate, and the sooner they find out, the better. Then, they can get on with their working life and not waste the $18,000/year. So perhaps the college should be sued. So tell me...if a student is by and large eligible, what criteria should they use for denying them admission? just raise their admissions standards.....there are no reasons why colleges like the college I graduated from or the college you work at needs to have so many students seeking college degrees..... So what you are saying is that we should divert a bunch of $$$ from four year schools to tech schools. Actually, I don't know about divert - but we should massively increase funding for vocational/technical programs. would be a good idea, if that money was spent effectively..... A lot of people not familiar with the wastes and uselessness of some tech schools believes these are places where previous dumb***** come out learning how to be fairly well paid electricians, plumbers, etc....the reality is for 85% of the students it's just a govt/ financial aid money grab for a bunch of dumbasses who have no real future..... - Hide quoted text -- Show quoted text -

---

college degrees The Culture of Me, run amok...

Posted by mianderson - 2009/09/08 16:12

- Show quoted text -